Bullfighting Stories Roddy Doyle

Roddy Doyle sure knows what goes on in the minds of straight, white 40-something Dublin men, because they're the protagonists in each one of the 13 stories in Bullfighting. Approaching midlife, Doyle's men are slowing down, taking stock, facing mortality, yet not going down without a fight – or at least a rant and/or a jovial, valedictory pint or two with their mates.

Like all of Roddy Doyle's books I enjoyed it and found "Bullfighting" to be no less a pleasant experience. But despite that and the fact that there wasn't any one story I found to be a waste of time, the lightness of touch in the stories makes me think I won't remember them for very long and that even the ones I did like will be hard to recall in a year's time, maybe less.

The Reading Life: "Bullfighting" by Roddy Doyle (podcast)

Roddy Doyle's Bullfighting is a collection of short stories that portrays a contemporary Ireland with touching, dialogue-heavy realism. This is the second collection of stories from Doyle, who has also written nine novels. The stories here are largely focused on aging men who are coping with the loss of family, the breakdown of the body and the disintegration of marriages.
