I've watched the Matachines dance in front of our neighborhood church since I was very little (a long time now!), but not until I started researching matachines did I understand the significance of the individual dancers. As with the mariachis, the origins of the matachines are a little fuzzy. Even though they dance and host celebrations throughout the year, their most important performing ...

the Matachines de la Santa Cruz affirm their spiritual bonds to the Virgin and the Cross, to each other, and to their community by dancing before their altar in the Ladrillera Barrio of Laredo. Most of the members of this religious brotherhood came to Laredo in the late 1930s from the mining towns of Chanel Palafox and Dolores in northern Mexico.
