The Powers That Be, Studies in Biblical Theology No. 29 ...

In this half of life, we have made a shift from searching for power to learning what it means to be people of a different kind of power. We are more interested in the power of love that fills people without taking anything from them. We would rather be remembered as having the heart of Mother Teresa than the ability of any politician.

The Powers That Be is as concerned with salvation as with justice, as relevant for our spiritual selves as for our political lives. Wink closely examines "the Powers, " and by exposing them for what they are in true prophetic fashion, levels a mighty blow against them.in our fast-paced secular world, God and theology are second-class citizens.
